hey guys, moth here! this is my first time writing on wattpad so things may be a bit messy, but i'll figure them out eventually-the first chapter should be up at some point, it may take a while though so bear with me here! i hope you all have a wonderful day/ night!

warning before you read!

[A/N]

hey everyone! i wanted to remind you guys that this is a warrior cats story, and it will include things like:

-death/murder

-cats

-detailed descriptions of dead bodies/murder/gore

-more murder

-lgtbqia+ characters

if you're sensitive to this kind of stuff, i suggest clicking away. i don't want to freak anyone out! (although i don't know why you would be scared of cats...)

anyway, i'll post the prologue after this, so stay safe everyone!

prologue

The shimmering, incandescent glow of StarClan territory gently cast its light onto my gray tabby pelt, yet anger and unease churned in my belly. My amber gaze hardened at the sight of the cat who approached, the star-speckled calico pelt ahead wiped clean of its wounds, its bloodstains, its scars. My jaw opened, a single word tumbling out.

"Beetlewish," I said carefully, attempting to keep the venom out of my voice. Beetlewish, my sister, my best friend, my enemy, my victim. Beetlewish, the cat who tried to steal my leadership, my power. Beetlewish, just another life ended at my paws. She dipped her head.

"Ashenrain. StarClan has sent me to tell you we are not granting you your nine lives." I laughed dryly.

"I figured as much. You StarClan cats have always been squeamish. I don't need nine lives to be a leader, Beetlewish. It's Ashenstar now." I flicked my long, striped tail, looming over the thick-furred calico. "Besides, all you star-furs do up here is sit and look pretty. When have you ever raised a paw to help? It's not like you're going to stop me." Beetlewish hissed, the fur along her back raising slightly. She raised her head to look me in the eyes, her gentle sage-scented breath meeting my nose.

"We may not be able to stop you, Ash, but you know better than anyone that history repeats." I flinched at the nickname, the name she had called me when we were younger. Her words bored into my mind, dragging out memories I had tried to repress.

A tortoiseshell she-cat, her amber eyes wide and pleading, sheathed paws batting feebly at my stomach. I dug my long, sharpened claws into her throat, pulling. Flesh and fur tore underneath my paws, a final gurgling screech of pain escaping Tangleskip before she fell limp. I cackled to myself, amber orbs glinting in the moonlight.

The scene changes.

Now, Beetlewish lay under my paws, begging for mercy. Those familiar green eyes, once so serene, now panicked and distraught.

"This is how I die, isn't it?" She had said. "I'll die the same way you killed our mother. The same way you've killed and will kill so many others. When will it be enough for you?" I sunk my merciless claws into her throat, not willing to listen to her gentle voice so distressed. A grimace was plastered onto my face, the grim laughter that came with Tangleskip's death not reaching me this time.

Her words echoed in my mind.

"This is how I die, isn't it?"

"You know better than anyone that history repeats."

"When will it be enough for you?"

And then it faded to black.

hi everyone! i'm back :)

sorry the prologue was really short- it wasn't even 500 words!!

the first chapter should be longer (i think...) so stay safe until then and have a good day/night!!
